Healing people well.

Running the business better.

How a multi-specialty wellness clinic stopped losing patients to competitors, built a scalable care model, and turned clinical reputation into commercial growth — with Stralchemy.

BACKGROUND

A multi-specialty wellness clinic with strong clinical outcomes and a loyal core patient base had been operating for eight years across two locations. The founders — both practicing clinicians — had built their reputation entirely on the quality of care they delivered.

Word-of-mouth kept the waiting rooms reasonably full. But beneath that, the business was underperforming its potential significantly. Patients recovered and left — rarely to return for preventive care. Corporate clients, who could bring consistent volume, had never been approached. And the administrative side of the practice was running on intuition rather than systems.

Stralchemy was engaged to build the commercial layer that the clinical excellence deserved.

PAINPOINTS

The diagnostic phase revealed four gaps - each common to clinical-led businesses where the founders' expertise lies in care, not commerce:

One-visit patient relationships

The majority of patients came in for a single acute episode and never returned. There was no follow-up protocol, no preventive care journey, and no structured reason for patients to think of the clinic between symptoms.

Underutilized clinical capacity

Peak hours were overbooked while off-peak slots sat empty. Without dynamic scheduling or a demand management system, the clinic was simultaneously turning patients away and leaving revenue uncaptured - often on the same day.

No corporate or institutional channel

Three large employers operated within 2 km of the clinic's primary location. None had been approached. Corporate wellness was a high-value, recurring revenue opportunity sitting entirely unaddressed.

Brand invisible beyond referrals

The clinic's digital presence was minimal and outdated. New patients arrived almost exclusively through doctor referrals and word-of-mouth - channels the founders could not control, scale, or optimize.

THE STRALCHEMY ENGAGEMENT

Stralchemy ran a focused 12-week engagement designed specifically for a clinician-led business — respecting the primacy of patient outcomes while building the commercial architecture around them. Every intervention was light enough not to burden the clinical team and robust enough to outlast the engagement.

1. Patient Lifecycle Design

Stralchemy mapped the full patient journey from first visit to long-term relationship and identified five natural touchpoints for re-engagement. A structured follow-up protocol was built — post-treatment check-ins, seasonal preventive care nudges, and an annual wellness review programme. Patients who had visited once now had a structured reason to return.

2. Care Pathway Monetization

A tiered wellness programme was designed — moving patients from episodic care to ongoing health management packages. Three structured pathways were created for the clinic's highest-volume conditions. Patients received better continuity of care; the clinic received predictable, recurring revenue. Revenue per patient rose 44% within two quarters.

3. Corporate Wellness Channel Launch

Stralchemy built a corporate wellness proposition from the clinic's existing services — annual health screenings, stress and lifestyle management programmes, and on-site consultation slots. An outreach playbook was developed and the first five corporate conversations were run with Stralchemy directly supporting. Eleven contracts were signed within 10 months, bringing consistent monthly volume the clinic had never experienced before.

4. Digital Presence & Reputation Strategy

A lean digital visibility plan was built — a refreshed website anchored in patient outcomes, a structured Google review programme, and a content strategy built around the founders' clinical expertise. Organic search traffic tripled within 90 days. New patient acquisition was no longer entirely dependent on referral networks the clinic couldn't influence.

OUTCOMES

Patients who stay, not just recover

Patient retention rose 52% within 8 months. The annual wellness review program enrolled 340 patients in its first cycle, creating a recurring revenue base that had never existed before.

More value from every patient

Revenue per patient grew 44% through the care pathway model. The shift from episodic to managed care improved both clinical outcomes and commercial predictability simultaneously.

Corporate channel generating volume

Eleven corporate wellness contracts delivered consistent off-peak appointment volume - filling the scheduling gaps that had previously gone to waste. Corporate revenue reached 27% of total within 10 months.

Discoverable beyond word-of-mouth

Organic search visibility tripled. New patient enquiries from digital channels grew from near-zero to 31% of total intake - reducing referral dependency for the first time in the clinic's history.

“As clinicians, we knew how to take care of patients. What Stralchemistry helped us understand is that taking care of the business is also taking care of patients - because a well-run clinic can serve far more people, far better.”
